"It is nothing of the sort," I contradicted: "I am boarding with you. Here is five dollars. If I am here longer than a week you get another five. I leave it to you, for you own sake, to throw pursuit off the track. Remember what will happen to you if I am crught."

"But, stranger"—"

"Here's the money. Now we understand each other. Keep your share of the bargain and if they catch me I'll keep still about you. By the way, when you leave the food tonight, leave a little parcel of red pepper. too."

"Red pepper? Why?"—"

"To his part of the country a sheriff's posse, has been known to use bloodhounds to hunt down criminals. The dogs run along, sniffing the ground. The first sniff that fill their nostrils with red pepper is apt to spoil all their interest in the case. That's why."

"Stranger!" he exclaimed, with reluctant admiration. "You've got a brain. I'll say that for ye."

It was a comfort to hear even this thickhead praise my sense, after my follies of the past few days.

"Everything is understood, then?" I went on.
